rial from the Peoria, Ill., Journal in relation to the controversy relative to the part taken by Mr. Ernest Seyd of England, in the legislation of 1873. The Journal printed what purported to be a quotation from Mr. Hooper's speech in the house of representatives to contradict the letter of Mr. Seyd's son. In this question the words re-ferring to Mr. Seyd. "Who is now were attributed to Mr. Hooper. Mr. Hoar had that part of Mr. Hooper's speech read from the Congressiona! Record and the words, "Who is now here," did not appear. These words," he said, "are a deliberate, violent, andaeious, unscrupulous and infamous forgery."
Mr. Cullom of Il inois knew the editor of the Peoria Journal, Mr. Barnes and while he was astonished at the misquotation he was sure Mr. Barnes was not personally responsible.

The debate continued for more than an hour and then Mr. Peffer of Kansas sent to the desk and had read the letter of the president to Governor Northen of Georgia. The letter did not dissipate, said he, the confusion in the public mind as to the president's real opinions on the monetary questions. He might be a monometalist; he might be a bimetallist; but there was nothing in the president's letter to show what kind of a metallist he

There is but one thing the president insisted upon, and that was the repeal of the Sherman law. Mr. Peffer's speech covered a wide range of subjects. The opening of the Cherokee strip; the methods of loaning money on Western farm lands, the employment of armed forces in difficulties between employers and employed and the loaning of money at usurious rates were all discussed incidentally to the original question. When he was denouncing the loaning of money at what he called usurious rates, Mr. Hawley, Republican, of Connecticut inquired if the senator from Kansas had any money he wanted to loan without interest. Mr. Peffer, unfortunately was 1.34; calves 423. Mr. Peffer at 5:10 reached what he denominated the subject of "Parities." Then he paused and said that while he was willing to continue with his speech in the evening and to address the senate until sunrise this morning, he did not desire to exhaust the patience of the senate by asking senaexecutive session, after which the
